HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

Art Soup is a guide to San Francisco's arts for children. It covers all of the arts—performing, visual, media, and literary—describing in detail what to expect from an arts program, and also, what to look for. With this book, you and your children together can decide which program is the right one.

"It took me a lifetime to learn to draw like a child."
Pablo Picasso

Art Soup is also an introduction. Our directory provides you with important information on 88 programs in San Francisco. Inevitably, we could not uncover all the existing programs in the city, but our listings should give you a taste of the rich offerings available. We have also included a separate listing of individual artists who work in the community with children.

Finally, Art Soup is a motivating tool. We hope to encourage you to explore the various activities available and to impress on you not only why art is important for children, but how you can help to develop better and even more cultural programs for them. The opportunity to improve and expand arts programming in San Francisco most certainly exists, and you are key to making it happen.

WHY ART IS IMPORTANT

Art is too often regarded as marginal or not necessary to a student's education. Ironically enough, art involves those very critical processes so vital to learning: problem solving, analytic thinking, idea development, and the ability to communicate through many different media. Art challenges children to explore their own imaginations and helps them to understand better their own culture, as well as that of others.

With most parents working today, the need for quality after-school programs has become critical. These programs should serve to enrich, not just to fill up spare time or function as childcare. The right art program for your children can expand and build upon the art education they already receive in the school curriculum and will also give them a unique chance to work with professional artists. Also, by enrolling your children in an arts program, you can be assured that they are having fun, while their general education is being broadened and strengthened.

We strongly encourage you to take advantage of the rich and diverse culture of San Francisco. Many museums, theatres, and community centers have programs especially designed for children. Involvement in these activities is essential, as it can instill in your children a greater appreciation of the impact of art on the city's social and physical environment. Ultimately, the success of any arts program depends largely on you. This is especially true of neighborhood programs, which are a direct reflection of the efforts of their residents and hence, your participation assists them in being more responsive to the community's needs.

WHICH ART PROGRAM

Preparation

The first thing to do when choosing an art program is determine what your goals and priorities are. Children should take part in this process, so you may have a clear picture of what they do and do not want from a program. You will find programs that come close to your needs, as well as some that may exceed your expectations. You may even discover some to be entirely different from how you envisioned them. It is helpful to be as receptive as possible to the wide range of environments available, and to encourage your children to do likewise. Art programs, after all, are places where creative freedom and experimentation are encouraged.

Questions you might ask yourself and your children when selecting a program:

- What kinds of art has your child already been involved in?
- Are you looking for broad exposure to several disciplines or training in one particular field?
- Are you interested in a program that is integrated with other non-art activities or one which focuses solely on art?
- How much supervision/direction does your child require in order to feel comfortable and work productively?
- What sort of student-teacher ratio are you looking for?
- How intensive a program are you looking for, in terms of frequency of meeting and duration?
- Are you more interested in a program with a workshop emphasis or one that is geared towards a final product?
- Are you interested in a program that incorporates field trips and out-of-classroom experiences?

Disciplines

We have described below the various disciplines in the arts to give you an idea of what is available. Be aware, though, that many arts activities for children do not necessarily fit into these categories. For instance, they may integrate several different mediums together. This description should give you a general outline of the arts, but it is a good idea to find out exactly what a school or program has to offer.

Visual Arts- The visual arts include two-dimensional and three-dimensional work. For example, painting, drawing, printmaking, graphic design, photography, sculpture, and crafts. Certain of these processes offer the chance for children to master all different kinds of equipment, such as potter's wheels, printmaking plates, photographic developers, etc. There is also a wide variety in the types of visual arts classes offered, depending upon, for instance, the materials used; whether or not the class has a particular focus or is free-ranging; if projects are individual or collaborative. From these disciplines, your children will gain the training and skills necessary to express themselves through visual and spatial materials.

Performing Arts- The performing arts usually refer to theatre, dance, movement, and music. Again, the classes may be highly structured in format, or quite loose. Activities can range widely; for example, in theatre, children may be given the opportunity to try their hand at directing, writing, improvisation, scenery or stagecraft, in addition to performance. Certain programs emphasize the process of learning, while others serve as preparation for final productions. Many programs stimulate children to experiment and combine performance with other artistic forms. Programs in the performing arts provide instruction as well a safe, creative environment where children can overcome inhibitions and learn to express themselves among peers.

Media and Literary Arts- The media arts include film, video, animation, and audio. The literary arts include creative writing and story-telling. Classes in the media arts provide the opportunity for students to learn how to use technical equipment such as film and video cameras and audio equipment. The literary arts offer students the chance to develop their written and oral expression.

Environment

The best gauge for evaluating an art environment is your child's reaction. Children should feel comfortable in the program and it is important to be sensitive to their needs.

A program may be part of a larger organization, such as a community center, or it may be in a smaller or specialized school. Generally speaking, at community centers, there are recreational activities and other services available in addition to arts programs. Also, participants have the opportunity to mix with children of different ages and backgrounds. On-the-other-hand, a more specialized school may provide the artistic focus and training some children prefer.

Class/Workshop Structure

Perhaps the single most important element in an after-school program is the instructor; the rapport between student and teacher/artist is what largely determines the learning experience. It is also helpful to look at the program's teaching philosophy, size of classes, teacher-student ratio, and opportunities for fieldtrips, final exhibits, or productions. Look into continuity, for many children like to see the same faces over time.

One should not necessarily gauge the effectiveness of a class by the works produced. The learning experience and exposure to the form are themselves valuable. In fact, some children's needs may be better suited by one-shot process-oriented workshops rather than product-oriented classes. Again, be attentive to your child's reaction to the classroom/workshop atmosphere and choose an environment in which they will flourish and feel comfortable.

Facilities

When looking for an after-school program, it is a good idea to visit the site with your children. If you can not, we suggest sending your children (if old enough), or making sure you ask specific questions when querying over the phone. Facilities should be evaluated in terms of the discipline or activities taking place. For instance, if it is a dance program, you want to determine whether the space is large enough, with good floors, and rooms for changing. Or if it is a visual arts studio, you should be concerned with the ventilation system, especially when paints or inks are involved. You should also check to see that there are easily accessible bathrooms and water fountains, and in general, whether or not the facility is well set up, so your children can easily find their way around.

Location

Location figures heavily in the choice of an after-school program. There are many advantages to choosing a neighborhood program: It is convenient and provides you with the opportunity to take part in your local community arts. You may find, however, a program outside your neighborhood that is suited to your needs. If you have something specific in mind, do not let location discourage you, for public transportation makes available virtually all parts of the city (we have included information on public transportation access for each program in the directory). Also, it is sometimes possible to arrange for school buses to drop off at an after-school site. To find out more about this, inquire through your child's school.

Tuition or Fees

Tuition or fees for programs are subject to change from season to season. We suggest that you call the programs in order to receive specific up-to-date information. Some programs charge per class, while others have a special or set price for a series or session. Many programs offer family rates or have sliding fee scales according to income. In our listings, we have also included information on scholarship availability for each program. This, too, is subject to change according to each organization's seasonal funds and some programs not currently offering scholarships may have them available in the future. Note that a number of programs in the guide are free of charge.

ADDITIONAL OPPORTUNITIES

Apprenticeship Programs

Another alternative for older children who are looking to further their skills in a specific discipline is an apprenticeship. Apprenticeship programs provide on-the-job training in the arts, giving students hands-on professional experience. Many also provide school credit. Some apprenticeships are part of the programming of a cultural institution, others may be with individual artists.

The Neighborhood Arts Program (NAP) is currently developing an apprenticeship networking system between high school students, artists, and arts organizations. A quarterly newsletter will be printed, which will list the apprenticeship opportunities available and it will be distributed to students, schools, and any other interested individuals.

Some of the organizations included in this guide offer apprenticeship opportunities. They are indicated by an asterisk (*). For more information on the apprenticeship network, contact the NAP office.

California Arts Council Artist-In-Residence Free Art Classes

The free classes offered through the C.A.C. Artist-In-Residence Program are additional opportunities that may be appropriate for your child. These residencies are conducted in the city's neighborhoods, social institutions, and schools. Classes are offered to all age groups with many focusing on children. Most of them are taught during after-school hours and some programs continue for a three year period. This program provides the opportunity for the student to work with a trained artist-professional and as the classes are often related to the cultural life of the community, also provide an avenue for the student to make a positive contribution to his or her neighborhood.

San Francisco's C.A.C. Artist-In-Residence programs in the communities include workshops in dance, literature, media, music, theatre, and visual arts. NAP prints a brochure each year called, "Free Art Classes," which lists information about the residencies for the year. Visit or contact the NAP office to obtain a copy.

Children's Cultural Events

All year-round, children's events occur within San Francisco, offered by different arts groups, schools, and organizations. There are opportunities to take part in hands-on workshops, or enjoy performances, films, and exhibits geared specifically to children. Many of these events are free. To find out about these various opportunities, we recommend checking the "For Children" listing of the San Francisco Chronicle's Pink Section, monthly schedules for museums, libraries, arts centers, local newsletters, and community bulletin boards.

Young Audiences of the Bay Area has available an ARTSCARD for Bay Area students (K-12th grade). This enables the student plus some family members to receive up to 50% off admission prices to certain museums and performing arts events. The cards are distributed free through schools, libraries, and at any Young Audience's school or public performances. Students or parents should inquire at their school or library to receive a card. Organized groups or teachers wishing to receive a larger number of cards may contact, ARTSCARD Project, Young Audiences of the Bay Area, 1182 Market Street, #310, SF 94102.

Noteworthy, is the Annual Imagination Celebration/ Youth Arts Festival, which is presented every May in Golden Gate Park by a collaborative of the San Francisco Unified School District (SFUSD), the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco, the San Francisco Education Fund, the San Francisco Arts Commission and the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. This is a four day multicultural celebration of San Francisco's diverse cultural heritage as reflected in the art work and performances of children. The festival features hands-on art activities, performances, and an exhibit of children's art work in the De Young Museum. The event is free and teachers, artists, students, and parents are encouraged to participate. Call the SFUSD at 664-1680 for more information. (Included in this publication are some of the art work from the 1989 Youth Arts Festival student exhibition .

WHAT IS OUT THERE

Our research has uncovered a wide variety of children's arts programs in San Francisco. Visual and performing arts are especially strong. Also noteworthy are several programs designed for the handicapped, bilingual classes, and groups specially dedicated to promoting ethnic arts. Many are also available for in-school programs. As all neighborhoods do not offer such a diverse range, we think the best approach is to regard the entire city as your cultural resource.

Discipline areas that could especially use expanding are media and literary arts. Again, your voice can make the difference in helping to address these needs.

*"Treat the earth well...it was not given to you by your parents...it was lent
to you by your children."
Kenyan Proverb*

HOW YOU CAN HELP

Despite cutbacks and a general under-funding of the arts, neighborhood cultural programs continue to flourish. Their vitality is a result of the support of active local communities who recognize how necessary these organizations are. Ultimately, the success of all neighborhood programs greatly depends upon a constant infusion of new ideas, assistance, and enthusiasum from its residents. One way you can support these programs is through the donation of materials. Programs are always in need of supplies and items you might ordinarily discard such as paper, wood, or fabric scraps can be valuable resources for a children's art class.

Finding an arts program exactly suited to the needs of you and your child may be difficult and frustrating. Our research has shown that there are many community and recreational centers throughout San Francisco offering no art activities. Yet the only way new arts programs can be created, or for existing ones to better reflect your needs, is for you to get involved. We urge you to join local boards and committees, talk to staff and volunteers, and become involved in the actual planning of cultural programs. Your participation is not only a chance to have an impact on your children's education, but an opportunity to discover the rich and vital arts community existing right outside your door.

One of the most important needs right now is a stronger link between the schools and community programs. Parents can provide this connection. With your help, the lively cultural activity occurring in the community can become part of your children's school education. You can make the difference by getting involved and promoting greater overlap between school and community arts programs.

This book should familiarize you with the excellent arts programs offered locally and we hope it will be useful in your search for an appropriate one for your child. Above all, we hope that you recognize the need to enhance and expand the arts both in and out of the schools and that you will get involved in working towards this goal.

Should you wish to share with us an arts program, which has meant a great deal to you and your children, but was not included in this publication, feel free to contact our office. Your comments are very much appreciated.

INDIVIDUAL ARTISTS IN THE COMMUNITY

The following is a list of artists who are:

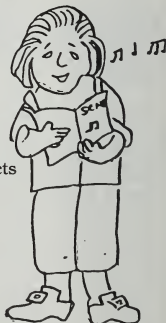

- currently teaching art during or after school at studio, community, or school sites in San Francisco, or
- have conducted such programs in the past and are interested in continuing to do so.

The purpose of this listing is to alert you to some programs occurring now and to inform parents, teachers, and community programs of artists who are available for teaching, predominately during after-school hours. Some of these artists conduct classes that occur on a regular basis from year-to-year, while others conduct short-term workshops at various community sites.

This category in the directory is a new idea and as a result, it is not representative of all the individual artists who work with children in the city. We, therefore, offer this list as an introduction. We hope that this will make you aware of a valuable teaching resource in the community, which may also serve as a means for providing art activities at school or community sites where they are currently unavailable.
